What is the cause of the increased rate of atrial fibrillation after surgery for coronary artery disease? To determine the incidence and consequences of atrial fibrillation after coronary artery bypass graft surgery and the time of onset. Prospective follow-up of patients undergoing coronary artery bypass graft surgery. Three tertiary hospitals in central and western New South Wales, Australia. One hundred and eighty consecutive patients undergoing coronary artery bypass graft surgery. Standard monitoring, atrial fibrillation is defined as a minimum of 30 s of continuous atrial flutter or fibrillation. The operation was undertaken without cardioversion to allow for the postoperative recovery of the heart. During the study period, 182 patients underwent coronary artery bypass grafting without cardioversion. Atrial fibrillation was recorded in 82% of patients. Factors found to be significantly associated with the presence of atrial fibrillation were age, left ventricular function, and intra-aortic balloon pump insertion. Postoperatively, atrial fibrillation was more likely to occur in patients in atrial fibrillation preoperatively ($p = 0.023$), and those with a preoperative history of atrial fibrillation ($p = 0.0052$) and complete heart block ($p = 0.011$). No significant increase in the incidence of atrial fibrillation was found in patients who received preoperative beta-blocker therapy. One hundred and twenty-four patients (66%) had atrial fibrillation for more than 24 h. Over 95% of the arrhythmia was of paroxysmal type. Forty-one percent of the patients had a hospital stay of more than 10 days. Patients with atrial fibrillation, especially those with atrial fibrillation before or after surgery, have a greater risk of complications and a prolonged hospital stay.
