"A 100% sound-alike mix of the MP3's original tracks" -- Samples, and ultimately songs are created by combining small "clips" of audio - small audio sections that are then played back together, or mixed. These can be found in any music library. Samples used in your song will mostly be from tracks on your own CD's, or from libraries on the internet. Sometimes, we would like to extract a sample from a song, or we would like to mix samples together, to form a new track. This can be achieved using a program called a sampler. Most samplers are free software - they are not "commercial products" in the same way as a word processor is. These samplers are designed to provide you with a quick and easy way to produce your own samples. They generally have either a simple or a slightly more advanced user interface. Once set up they will allow you to make your own audio files of your own music, and they can easily be played back in any application that has a sound output. This includes most music players, CD players and MP3 players. You don't need any special skills to use a sampler, however you will need to have a PC (Personal Computer) and a sound card (which is a device that connects your sound output to your computer) to produce your own music. As well as the sampler software itself, you will need to have a CD (Compact Disc), a pair of headphones and a couple of CD's. You can use the sampler software on its own without ever having a CD in your computer. The software will load the CD, automatically start playing a track, and then save the file to your hard disk. This is what the sampler does. To get the best results, try to purchase a collection of CD's that contain only your favourite tracks. To produce your own CD's, you will need a CD burner. This is the software that allows you to put CD's onto CD's. There are many different types of CD's, with different capacity's, and different audio standards. The type you select will depend on the kind of CD's that you want to produce. Some CD's can be loaded directly into the CD burner, so they will just need to be put in your CD drive. Some CD's, such as Audio CDs, need to be converted into a format that the CD burner can use. This is usually

Q: How to create a SQL Server view that returns a string in the values of some rows I want to create a view that will return a string of values in the values of some rows, and in some cases, one of the values. The values of the field are strings that have been split up and concatenated to form a string. The way the data is currently stored in SQL Server, we are not able to store a full string in one field, but rather, several strings that are concatenated together. I am hoping to create a view that will concatenate the values into a string. In the sample data below, the value for Revenue would be 3.25 + 6.99 = 9.24, and for the Paid field, we would have a value of 3.25 + 2.95 + 5.99 = 11.24. If I just create a view and store these values in the View as a string, then I would be able to manipulate them in other queries using that view, but I would lose the ability to store this as separate values in other fields. If I go with the Substring and Try_Convert solution, then I lose the ability to manipulate the strings. CREATE VIEW [Sales].[Stk_Max_Att] AS SELECT [Sales].[Stk_Max_Att].Ref AS [Stock Max], SUM(CAST([Sales].[Stk_Max_Att].Revenue AS int)) AS [Sales Revenue], SUM(CAST([Sales].[Stk_Max_Att].Paid AS int)) AS [Sales Paid] FROM [Sales].[Stk_Max_Att] GROUP BY [Sales].[Stk_Max_Att].Ref, CAST(RIGHT(CONVERT(VARCHAR,CAST([Sales].[Stk_Max_Att].Paid AS INT) +
