Hydrogen-deuterium exchange of N-terminal segments within alpha-synuclein. A novel recognition determinant. alpha-Synuclein, a 140-amino acid protein involved in the etiology of Parkinson's disease, is a homogeneous, globular protein. Several helices can be extracted from this molecule using trypsin and, upon refolding, form a compact tertiary structure. The tryptic fragments cover a great part of the molecule and form stable secondary structures with different folding patterns. The main element in this complex picture is the N-terminal region, which has been described in a previous study as forming a flexible structure composed of several alpha-helices. We have analyzed the secondary structure of the N-terminal region in several alpha-synuclein tryptic fragments using hydrogen-deuterium exchange experiments. Analysis of exchange in amide hydrogen in peptide bonds revealed two distinct groups of protected segments, corresponding to regions with and without secondary structure. Furthermore, the experimental data were obtained for the same tryptic fragments using both native and denaturing conditions of proteolysis. Our data are in agreement with a previous report indicating that the N-terminal region of alpha-synuclein is highly flexible. We propose that the existence of beta-structural domains in the N-terminal region of alpha-synuclein reflects the presence of recognition determinants whose presence may be important for protein-protein interactions.Q: Given a list, how do I find the (a) element that occurs first in the list? I don't understand how to find the first element in a list. If a list is [1,2,3,4,1], how do I find the first occurrence of 1? A: This is the first time I've seen this question, so the answer is a bit special (see below for clarification). If you want to find the first occurrence of x that occurs at the start of a sequence of elements, use the following definition of first: first = head[::[x]] In the OP's question, the elements of the list that are located at the start of the sequence were given by the pattern [1,2,3,4,1]. Given that, one could have written the following: first = first[::[4]] first #> 4 You can see that, by wrapping x in a sequence, you can
