Sixteen years after Kansas canceled the voter-approved law that required photo ID to vote, voters there have the chance to change that. With the midterm election season underway, a new petition drive is pushing a new law that would require voters to show photo ID. A state-based coalition called Kansans for Voter Equality is working to put the issue on the November 2018 ballot, with a goal of getting it passed before 2020. "The time is now. We should not wait another 16 years to fix this law," said Clint Guidry, president of the Kansans for Voter Equality Coalition. The 2016 law passed in Kansas with 52 percent of the vote, but it was eventually repealed when the law was challenged in court. It was the first time in the country that a voter-approved ID law was struck down by a federal court. According to Guidry, once the law was struck down, he and others launched an effort to get voters to petition the legislature to put the law back on the ballot. "We had a huge turnout in this last election. We had a record amount of signatures, which was unprecedented, which shows the passion of the people. We are going to make sure it is on the ballot next year," Guidry said. But is a ballot measure needed? The president of the Kansas Association of Defense Counsel, Allen Jackson, says he doesn't think a voter-approved photo ID law is necessary because the state is working to make sure no voter can be disenfranchised. "There is no evidence that any in-
