Category:Android (operating system) softwareQ: WebAPI Post method returns 301 response when using HTTPs I have an ASP.NET MVC application using a WebAPI service. The WebAPI is hosted in a different domain than my MVC application. When I make a POST request to the WebAPI, I get a 301 response, even though the request is made with HTTPS. Here is my WebAPI controller action: [HttpPost] public void Post([FromBody]Order order) { ... }

What's New In Sunflower Mobilesystem Office?

The main function of the app is to view photos and slideshows, with support for SD, USB and SDCARD storage devices. It is in the form of an applet and offers many features, such as the possibility of saving some photos. It offers a slideshow viewer where you can watch and pause or edit photos. You can also create a photo album where you can create albums and share them. You can choose between the record mode and the view mode. Record mode uses the camera and supports video recording. The record mode is more powerful than the slideshow mode. You can also save and edit videos. There are built-in editing tools, as well as the possibility of adding text and captions. You can also use your email client or cloud storage to back up your photos. The Slideshow Viewer mode, which you can use to watch photos, is more suitable for day to day use. The screen is very simple, with just a clock and a network indicator. The program can be fully functional without any installation. It works on both the desktop and mobile platforms and has support for USB, SD, and SDCARD devices. I know how to do it, but the physics behind it confuses me (and my book is unfortunately not giving solutions to my questions). Here is the situation : An object, with acceleration a is dropped from rest and after falling with a uniform acceleration A reaches its maximum height H at time $t = \frac{H}{A}$ The problem is to derive the rate of change of the acceleration. After calculating $u(t)$ I get : $u(t) = A \sin(\omega t)$. I can't understand why it is so, in particular why the derivative of $u(t)$ must be negative. To avoid confusion :
