Selected Pro-Am matches were used to train the software that powers FIFA 22. Subsequently, the squads participated in the broadcast on FOX and the EFL Championship. Goals from the broadcast were used to test the game. The EFL Championship simulation includes some aspects of real life football, like defending headers and crossfield passes; however, teams contain only four defenders with unlimited tackles. The only way the public can get their hands on FIFA 22 is at their local retailer in February, 2017.

With EA Sports FIFA 22, The biggest game of the year arrives with hundreds of new career-defining opportunities, expanded Ultimate Team, true-to-life emotion, improved player intelligence, and a brand-new TV-style Match Day experience. Excerpted from the FIFA 22 Release Notes. FIFA 22's major feature will be "HyperMotion Technology" which, for the first time in a FIFA game, combines live player movements with the animations of over 23 real-life players to produce a realistic on-the-ball experience. It also increases the game's responsiveness allowing for greater control over players by increasing natural movement. There are more than 300 visual and game play animations in the game, with a goal-to-goal action time of 0.039 seconds! The Dynamic Transfer Market is an all-new system where the game uses real-world player movement to impact player transfer prices. When a player joins a new club, they have a choice of playing and performing, earning experience points to accelerate their early career development or entering a League with top-rated players. Players earn more points by achieving the match-winner, substitutions or bonuses, so you can buy younger players for less or sign a full squad of high-profile players for a team with a promotion or relegation berth. A New Player Intelligence engine powers the game's AI. It's powered by real-world player data so the AI can make smarter decisions than ever before. Some of these decisions can be overridden by the game's defensive tactics, allowing for intelligent fouling. There are 27 new kits and design concepts featured in the game. You'll find the new EFL Championship red and white stripes, new Adidas playing kits and more. New Attacking and Defensive Tactics Offense There's a new emphasis
