"When I first played with the programme it felt as if I was using a very sophisticated piece of kit. "Instead of a set of rules and using a piece of software to implement them, "we are born with a potential to play. "I was initially shocked. It is my first time doing anything like that."

Eduardo Navarro, Pablo Dominguez, Francisco De La Luna, Santiago Soler "I am a member of Asociación del Club del Puertorichero, a chess coach who is a professor at the University of Seville, and a co-author of my children's book. "My motivations for developing this software are based on the following: " - The ability to make the use of computers and software easy for the user. " - Giving space to the user to express him or herself. " - The opportunity to do manual labour in less time than it takes to get someone to do it for you. "I hope that it can be used in a variety of different scenarios. "The Open SourceÂ .Characterisation of an extracellular citrate synthase (CS) from the isoprenoid-accumulating alga Cryptothecodinium cohnii. Citrate synthase (CS) catalyses the formation of citric acid from oxaloacetate and acetyl-coenzyme A (acetyl-CoA) via a condensation reaction. Due to its central role in the tricarboxylic acid cycle (TCA cycle), CS is a key enzyme of intermediary metabolism. In addition, it has the potential to be applied in biotechnology. Here, we describe the cloning of a CS from the isoprenoid-accumulating alga Cryptocodinium cohnii (CoCr CS) and its expression and biochemical characterisation.

CoCr CS is a cytoplasmic protein, and is only active in the presence of divalent ions, such as $Mg(2+)$ or $Mn(2+)$, via the citrate lyase complex.

CoCr CS is able to synthesise citric acid in vitro from acetyl-CoA and oxaloacetate, and is inactivated by sulfhydryl reagents. Based on its properties, CoCr CS is likely to be an aspartate-type CS. A significantly reduced CoCr CS activity was observed in the mutant strain of C. cohn
