"It was the hardest thing I've ever done," he said. "We were at the Civil War Museum, there was a Civil War reenactment going on. I had to ride past a bunch of reenactors who were on horseback, firing these guns at other reenactors, and they were shooting their pistols at each other. I was thinking to myself, 'Am I going to have to do this?' "And then after getting through that - I don't remember the amount of spectators - I got to the big ring at the Civil War Museum, and that's where I did it. They have a big sound and light system there, to tell people what's going on. And the crowd was like, 'Oh man, we finally have your back.' "I was talking to some guy and it was the first time I'd ever thought about doing it. And in the moment I did it, it just felt good." "I feel that from you, that it's like a legacy, that we did it together," he said. "It was something that we did." What viewers didn't see was the procession leading up to Big John's moment of redemption. He and the judge were leaving their "mission control" area to board their horses when Morgan and Blanche set out an elaborate ambush, "pinning" Big John in a cul-de-sac with a tiered viewing platform blocking his view of the judge. "I was scared to death, and I'm thinking, 'What am I going to do?'" Morgan said. "I looked at my wife and I said, 'This is a crazy thing we're doing here.' "The first thing that was going through my mind was, 'I've got to bring him home.' She e79caf774b
