Visalia Rainbows' season opener and first round playoff game also has been canceled as more than a foot of snow blanketed the nation's capital. Spokeswoman Tamara Deaton said Wednesday afternoon that with a state of emergency in place, only county roads were open, with Washington, D.C.'s main roads closed due to snow and ice, according to NBC Washington. Vashon Island was the first to see some snowfall in the morning, with the National Weather Service's forecast calling for 2-6 inches of snow before noon. In Fairfax County, snowfall was expected to start around 1 a.m. Wednesday and to taper off by the afternoon. A mix of freezing rain and sleet was also expected in the area, NBC Washington reported. Monday will be officially declared a "snow day" for schools in Fairfax County. More than 40 school events, including high school football games, were expected to be canceled or postponed. "County school divisions are prepared to modify the schedule and administer early release as needed," the school system said in a statement. "Staff has been prepared for the potential delays and has been instructed to be flexible in scheduling and staffing if necessary." The U.S. Coast Guard canceled all aerial operations in the D.C. area, NBC Washington reported. In D.C., snow was also falling from the evening commute to morning rush hour, with the National Park Service and Smithsonian canceling their scheduled morning programs. Schools have also canceled after-school activities and are closed Wednesday. The Capitals and Wizards, the D.C.'s two NBA teams, were scheduled to play their only pre-season game Wednesday night. The Pope Hates God The pope reportedly answered questions from reporters with non-answers, expressed disappointment and dismay with his flock, and held onto two questions he was forced to answer.
